

BREW SCAPE

ROUND 2 CASE ANALYSIS

STRATEGIA 2026

FROM COLD BREW TO
FUNCTIONAL BEVERAGE:
A PHASED GROWTH
STRATEGY

Growth Has Outpaced Strategic Readiness

1

Weakening Brand Differentiation

Brewscape's early positioning as a premium cold brew brand has lost distinctiveness as the ready-to-drink coffee category has become crowded. Competitors with aggressive digital and influencer strategies have reduced Brewscape's visibility, while the brand lacks a clear functional benefit that resonates with evolving health-conscious consumers.

2

Operational and Financial Fragility

Heavy reliance on contract manufacturing has resulted in production delays and quality inconsistencies, exposing the brand to execution risks. At the same time, rising raw material costs and a 74-day working capital cycle have tightened cash flows, limiting Brewscape's ability to sustain marketing spends and support rapid expansion.

3

Organisational Strain During Expansion

As Brewscape expanded into new cities, its informal startup culture failed to scale with the organisation. Increased workloads, unclear decision rights, and weak middle-management structures have led to rising sales attrition and operational inefficiencies, further constraining the company's growth readiness.

Reposition First, Scale Next

Reposition Brewscape as a Functional Beverage Brand

Brewscape should shift from being perceived as a niche premium cold brew brand to a functional, health-oriented beverage company. This repositioning responds to changing consumer preferences toward clean energy and nutrition and restores brand relevance in a crowded market. A clear functional promise will help Brewscape stand out beyond price and flavour competition.

Adopt a Phased Growth Strategy Anchored by a Protein Coffee Pilot

Instead of aggressive multi-city expansion, Brewscape should follow a phased growth approach, using a limited pilot launch of protein-infused cold brew coffee to validate demand and differentiation. This strategy balances urgency with discipline—addressing market pressures while strengthening internal readiness before scaling further.

Marketing

- Reposition Brewscape as “clean energy + nutrition” rather than just premium coffee.
- Launch protein-infused cold brew as a pilot SKU, not a mass rollout.
- Target fitness-conscious urban professionals (22–35).
- Reduce overreliance on influencers; focus on performance marketing, gym partnerships, and community-led content.
- Use pilot data to guide future product launches, avoiding repeat failures like Coconut Mocha.

Finance

- Improve liquidity by tightening inventory cycles and renegotiating retailer payment terms.
- Avoid short-term debt; raise a small equity round to fund repositioning without cash stress.
- Premium pricing for protein SKU to protect contribution margins.
- Shift focus from topline growth to cash conversion cycle and SKU-level profitability.

Operations & HR Strategy

OPERATIONS

- Continue with contract manufacturing under a hybrid control model:
- Small-batch production for protein coffee
- Stricter quality audits
- Temperature-controlled logistics
- Defer captive manufacturing until demand and volumes stabilise.
- Use the pilot phase to test shelf life, taste stability, and supply reliability.

HUMAN RESOURCES

- Reduce sales attrition through clearer targets, defined reporting lines, and performance-linked incentives.
- Formalise decision rights to eliminate last-minute execution chaos.
- Train sales teams on functional benefits to support the new brand narrative.
- Retain startup agility while introducing essential managerial structure.

Feasibility, Risks & Execution Roadmap

KEY RISKS

- Protein infusion may impact taste consistency and shelf stability
- Slower short-term revenue growth due to paused expansion
- Functional positioning initially narrows the target segment

Why This Strategy Is Feasible

- Limited capital expenditure
- Uses existing manufacturing partnerships
- Validates demand before scaling
- Aligns with current financial constraints

TRADE-OFF

Brewscape sacrifices rapid expansion today to build durable differentiation, operational reliability, and investor confidence for sustainable long-term growth.

6-12 MONTH EXECUTION ROADMAP

- 0–3 months: Brand repositioning, protein pilot, working capital optimisation
- 3–6 months: Pilot evaluation, supply chain strengthening
- 6–12 months: Selective metro expansion, captive manufacturing assessment

KEY METRICS:

- Repeat purchase rate
- Contribution margin
- Cash conversion cycle
- Sales attrition
- Quality compliance

Mujahid

Praveen

Muhammad

OUR TEAM

VoltEdge is a multidisciplinary team of engineering students from MNNIT Allahabad, focused on structured problem-solving and clear decision-making. We identify overlooked real-world challenges and translate them into practical, scalable solutions through rigorous analysis and thoughtful design.